What is Print On Demand?

Traditionally, if you were a creator of physical products such as books or CDs, you would create a master and then go to a publishing house and have a print run completed, usually at least 500 but often 10,000 or more.

This was simply because of the technology involved. It would mean setting up a print run which takes time (and money), and then printing the required amount of copies. There didn't exist a simple and cheap method of easily printing off a single copy of a book. Sure, you could get it done at your local printers, but the cost involved in printing one would often approach the cost of printing many. All the print run set up requirements were a fixed cost.

Your other alternative would be to get a plastic spine bound version or print the pages yourself and put them in a ring binder, but these methods lacked professionalism, and they still weren't cheap.

And you still then had to deliver the item.

Well, new technology changes everything.

In the last couple of years, several companies have arisen that (using new automated print processes) will print you a single copy of your book, CD or DVD, and they'll also do fulfillment (delivery) for you too.

This now means that anyone (YOU!) can write a book and have it professionally printed and bound as a paperback or whatever style you wish, for just a few dollars. The same applies to CD and DVD duplication.

This changes the whole online landscape.

People's perception of a CD or DVD for instance is that it has a higher value than a downloadable item. They have something physical that they can hold in their hand. This isn't so true of a book versus an ebook, as you can walk into any bookshop and purchase a paperback for a few dollars.

Then again, if the information you have isn't available anywhere else, you can charge what you believe it's worth, and people will be even happier that they're getting a book that they can read on the train etc, without needing a computer.

POD for eBay

There are 2 companies of particular interest to eBay sellers. These are Lulu.com and Kunaki.com.

Lulu.com offer an international service to primarily provide Print On Demand publishing of books, although they also offer printing of CDs and DVDs too. They provide authors with a storefront, and there's also a market place where your products are shown on the Lulu.com site.

The downside to Lulu.com is that you can't sell on eBay and have Lulu.com deliver the book for you. Maybe they'll offer that service one day.

What you would need to do is order a small number of copies and ship them yourself, or just take orders via eBay and then place the orders for fulfillment on Lulu yourself.

That's not a brilliant solution I know, but Lulu do have an API (Application Programmers Interface) in beta that will allow the use of third party scripts such as SmartDD to take orders and pass them onto Lulu for fulfillment.

After taking a look at the beta API, it seems to be a case of a sledgehammer to crack a walnut... Maybe they'll make it better / simpler at some point.

Next up is Kunaki.com. This is much better for eBayers who want a POD and fulfillment service for CDs and DVDs.

You can make the sale from your own web site or on eBay for example, and then have SmartDD automatically pass the order details to Kunaki. They'll then print a single copy of the CD or DVD and ship it to your customer.

To my mind, that's an ideal answer to eBay only allowing physical goods to be sold, as just like ebooks used to be, it's a completely hands-off solution for sellers.

You set it all up, then wait for the money to come in. There's none of that tiresome shipping and packing etc.

For $6.75 you can have created and shipped a CD or DVD anywhere in the US, or for $9.25 anywhere in the world.

Sidenote

Of course another answer is to use eBay classified ads and use that format to market digital goods on eBay, but that's not what this report is all about.

Other POD Sites

There are also a number of other POD web sites worth mentioning in their own right as they create goods other than books and discs.

This isn't an exhaustive list, but these are the ones I thought were worth showing you.

<http://www.spreadshirt.com/> - T-shirts, sweatshirts, underwear, mugs, stickers, badges. Great site, great interface.

<http://www.styleshake.com/> - dresses.

<http://www.zazzle.com/> - T-shirts, mugs and posters.

<http://www.cafepress.com/> - Lots of stuff - clothes, mugs, cards, mouse mats, stickers, etc.

<http://www.ponoko.com/> - Furniture(!), brooches, key rings, almost anything made from their supported materials.

As you can see, the entire POD industry is in its infancy, but the potential is enormous. There are now a huge range of goods you can advertise, sell and then after the sale you can have them produced and delivered to order.

You're no longer restricted to digital downloads to use to market to eBay, and it may even be worth your while to stop thinking in that way. After all, nothing lasts forever, not even great ways of marketing...

Think about this too. If you're a talented designer, you could create your own designs and brand, and then market that brand entirely via eBay, and have your products automatically shipped worldwide.

I believe that the real profit lies in non-commodity items.

If you want to sell unique or unusual high value info CDs, then you'll greatly benefit from being first to market.

If you're competing with a few hundred or a few thousand people all selling the same thing, then where are the profits?

Prices on eBay will be forced down to $2 or $3 and there won't be anything in it for anyone. You'd also be in the miserable position of burning your own discs and shipping them yourself in order to keep the price down. Hardly an automated business...

However... having said that, here's further food for thought...

If you're one of the first to create a set of unique high quality CDs or DVDs and sell them individually or as a collection with full master resale rights for $2 or $3, then before you know it they'll be all over eBay just like ebooks were.

If you're the first to do it you'll be laughing your way to the bank as you see your discs go viral all across eBay, with your affiliate links inside.

I'm sure you could afford to spend a little time seeding the market with new CDs and DVDs couldn't you? Resellers would snap them up like a shot and have them all over eBay in next to no time.

So now I've let the cat out of the bag, what are you waiting for?

Get creating!

Wordclay <http://www.wordclay.com/> Kevin Gray, Author Solutions; 317-246-9348. Email: kgray@wordclay.com. A free do-it-yourself online book publishing program for print-on-demand books. Their wizard formats your book for you from your manuscript and your book is ready to go in Word and PDF formats. Note: the wizard has one standard format which might not be right for every book. The format did not work well at all for the sample I uploaded, but they offer custom interior designs for $249.00 extra. They also provide standard book cover formats (about 20 choices). While the formatting is free and they will sell your book on their website, if you want bookstore distribution, you have to pay extra. Copyright registration also costs $99.00, but you can do that yourself for a lot less.
